

A HDW Colloquium with HALEY SHOAF

*Hosted jointly by the Humanities Digital Workshop and the Freedom | Information | Acts Studiolab

October 27th, at 3:30, via Zoom

Haley Shoaf is a principal at LaunchCode, a nonprofit organization that trains people for job placement in the broader technology industry through free courses in computer programming. She has extended this mission personally by working on initiatives to assist incarcerated student programmers, maintaining an ongoing partnership with a team at the Missouri's Potosi Correctional Facility, a team that has designed a scalable learning management system to be implemented statewide across the correctional system.

We look forward to hearing her insights on increasing educational access through technology and on programming under technological and access constraints.

Please also mark your calendars for an upcoming colloquium, the third this year, to be presented by Setsuko Yokoyama, this year's ACLS Postdoctoral Fellow in Digital Humanities. She will be discussing her book project, Access Exploit, which investigates the illusory immediacy produced by technical access to previously secluded cultures.

November 12th, at 3:30, via Zoom

Please write to Matt Kelley (matthew.kelley@wustl.edu) to RSVP.

We hope you will join us!

For more information on the Freedom | Information | Acts Studiolab, see the accompanying flyer.*